The NIH under the leadership of now-departed director Francis Collins relied on inaccurate information and misrepresented medical research to falsely claim that wearing a face mask helps to prevent severe transmission of the Fauci Flu. And the agency did so in spite of conflicting scientific evidence in its possession demonstrating the exact opposite.

If anything, masks make a person more prone to infection by blocking oxygen intake, not to mention the fact that mask material tends to harbor deadly pathogens and other exhaled waste, which sits right next to a person's nose and mouth.

In a recently obtained letter sent in November 2021 to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), leading epidemiologist Michael Osterholm, director of the Center for Infectious Disease Research and Policy at the University of Minnesota, along with seven of his colleagues, warned the CDC that it, too, was promoting the same flawed data while excluding contradictory data showing that masks do not work to prevent infection or spread.

That letter specifically called out the COVID-19 Real-Time Learning Network, a program jointly created by the CDC and the Infectious Diseases Society of America (IDSA), which contains false information that threatens to "damage the credibility of science" while endangering public trust by "misrepresenting the evidence" and giving the public "false expectations" about the alleged benefits they should expect to receive from wearing a mask.

increased risk of becoming infected with SARS-CoV-2 and for them to experience a serious or even life-threatening infection," Osterholm and the others wrote.

(Related: The CDC also admitted in late 2022 that natural immunity is much better than covid "vaccines" at protecting human health.)

design," Osterholm explained. "Studies that do not support its perspective are similarly downplayed."

With funding from the CDC, the COVID-19 Real-Time Learning Network was launched in 2020 as part of a government propaganda effort to push masks and social distancing as the solutions to covid. The IDSA itself also collaborates with the following big-name organizations:

• The American Academy of Family Physicians

• The American Academy of Pediatrics

• The American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists

• The American College of Physicians

• The Society of Critical Care Medicine

• The Society for Healthcare Epidemiology of America

• The Society of Infectious Diseases Pharmacists

Though they never followed through with his request, Osterholm petitioned the CDC and the IDSA to address the "serious errors" published on its website regarding the "efficacy" of masks, where he says "irresponsible claims were made."
